	Q1. Summary
	Racism is widespread in English football	I have a great deal or a fair amount of interest in football	Referees' conversations with football players on the pitch should be recorded	Over the past 5 years there has been an increase in the number of racist incidents in English football	Over the past 5 years there has been a decrease in the amount of violence demonstrated by English football fans	The Metropolitan Police are right to launch a formal investigation into whether or not a referee used racist language towards two football players	Racism is more widespread in English football than in other European countries	Referees in football get an appropriate amount of respect from players	Football games should introduce 'sin bins' where players can sit out part of the match when they have behaved in an unsportsman-like way	The Football Association is taking the issue of racism in football seriously enough	There are not enough football managers who are from Black or ethnic minority backgrounds	Harsher punishments for players and referees who are guilty of racist behaviour would reduce the number of racist incidents in the game	The 'Kick it Out' campaign funded by the Football Association has been effective at tackling racism in football	The current penalties for racist language in football are not severe enough	It would be impossible to eliminate racism in football completely	Generally speaking, I am satisfied with the way the Football Association governs professional football in England	The behaviour of professional footballers in England has got better over the last 10 years
