Q.3 From September 2011, the government is proposing that school pupils will be required to take one humanities subject at GCSE, as part of the new English Baccalaureate. Pupils will have to take one humanities subject from a list of "core" humanities subjects. The proposals as they stand include history and geography as core subjects but not religious education. Do you think religious education should be a core GCSE subject alongside other humanities like history and geography in the new English Baccalaureate, or not?
