Q11. Imagine the Government offered a specific, substantial loan allowance to each British citizen over the course of their lifetime and each citizen could choose what university courses this money was spent on (rather than most people just getting a loan for their first degree, regardless of how much it cost). When working, the citizen would pay back the amount of money they borrowed to the government, but only after they started earning more than a reasonably high salary. Imagine you have just left school and you were to go back and decide again what Higher Education courses you would take using this allowance, which of the following closest reflects how you might prioritise how you spend your money over your lifetime?

Bright Blue Part Time Study Survey

Q11. Imagine the Government offered a specific, substantial loan allowance to each British citizen over the course of their lifetime and each citizen could choose what university courses this money was spent on (rather than most people just getting a loan for their first degree, regardless of how much it cost). When working, the citizen would pay back the amount of money they borrowed to the government, but only after they started earning more than a reasonably high salary. Imagine you have just left school and you were to go back and decide again what Higher Education courses you would take using this allowance, which of the following closest reflects how you might prioritise how you spend your money over your lifetime?
