Summary Table

Base: All respondents

	Statements
	So long as NHS care is always free at the point of use, it does not matter whether the care is given by public or private providers	The Government is doing enough to reduce waiting times in the NHS	Waiting times in the NHS are too long	As long as care remains free at the point of use, the NHS should make use of private sector providers in order to reduce pressure on NHS hospitals during the winter months	The Government should prevent private sector providers from playing a part in extending NHS services to seven days a week, even if care remains free at the point of use	If waiting times at local hospitals exceed 18 weeks, I would choose to receive care at a private hospital delivering NHS care as long as it remained free at the point of use
